The Rehabilitation Counseling program at California State University, Los Angeles is fully accredited by the Council on Rehabilitation Education (CORE) from 2009 – 2017 (www.core-rehab.org). The Master's degree program is a full-time program with an annual goal of admitting 12-14 students in each of the two graduate cohorts. Our program accepts applications each year in the Fall with the cohorts beginning in the following Fall quarter. Student outcomes for the program are evaluated each Fall quarter over various areas which are then synthesized into the annual program evaluation.

The program has four full-time tenure-track faculty members and several adjunct faculty teaching the CORE accredited curriculum. There are 62 students in the Rehabilitation Counseling Program. Students’ grade point average yielded a 3.65. The student-faculty ratio (SFR) is 1:10. Course evaluation is conducted each term. The most recent evaluation yielded an average of 4.41 with 5.00 being the highest evaluation. For the 2010-2011 academic year, 28 students graduated from the program. In terms of underrepresented groups, the program has an average of 83%. This figure includes students with disabilities.

In the area of employment, the vast majority of our students work in rehabilitation-related fields. This includes the State Department of Rehabilitation, the Department of Veterans Affairs, Regional Centers, private non-profit organizations, colleges and universities, and agencies serving at-risk populations. Our alumni often receive promotions, awards, and honors and frequently advance their careers in supervisory and administrative capacities. A number of our outstanding alumni return to CSULA to teach on a part-time basis and some pursue doctoral studies in the rehabilitation field.
