What is Rehabilitation Counseling?
Rehabilitation Counseling is an exciting, growing, helping profession that provides services to economically and socially disadvantaged people who have physical, emotional, and/or intellectual disabilities.

What do Rehabilitation Counselors do?
Rehabilitation counselors help people suffering from disabilities gain employment in jobs which are satisfying, consistent with their interests, and within their limitations.

Where Do Rehabilitation Counselors Work?
Rehabilitation Counseling is a diverse and respected helping profession with employment opportunities in the public and private sector. Rehabilitation Counselor employment opportunities are offered by federal and state vocational rehabilitation programs. Additional employment opportunities are provided by secondary schools, community colleges, Veterans Administration hospitals, city and county agencies. In the private sectors nonprofit organizations, certain hospitals, independent living centers, and other providers of rehabilitation services provide career opportunities.

What is the Employment Outlook for Rehabilitation Counselors?
Demand for vocational or career counselors is increasing 21-35% per year as the notion of staying in one job over a lifetime continues to be rejected and replaced by the concept of managing one’s own career and taking responsibility for it. In addition, changes in welfare laws that require beneficiaries to work will continue to create demand for counselors by State and local governments. Other opportunities for employment counselors will arise in private job-training centers that provide training and other services to laid-off workers, as well as to those individuals seeking a new or second career or wanting to upgrade their skills.

Faculty Members
The Rehabilitation Education Faculty Members are: Caring, knowledgeable, student-centered, well-known and respected in the industry. The small sized classes allow the faculty to know the students on an individual basis and provide them with individual assistance with class material, help with internship placement, and assistance with job placement.
