FIRST EMERITI WEEK IS SUCCESSFUL

The first celebration of Emeriti Week on the University campus, held during the second week of February in recognition of the fifth anniversary of the founding of the Emeriti Association, was rated most successful.

Reacting to all of the favorable reports, the Association's Executive Committee directed the President and President-elect at its March meeting to proceed with establishing a committee to plan the coming year's celebration.

The Emeriti Week observance for 1983 began at the meeting of the University's Academic Senate on Tuesday, February 8. The University President's resolution proclaiming the second week of February as Emeriti Week was read, and the Chair of the Academic Senate, Frieda Stahl, called for recognition by the audience of some 25 of the emeriti faculty who were present and who had served as members of the Academic Senate during their time as active faculty.

Also, University President James Rosser chose the occasion of this meeting to present his annual "State of the University" report to the faculty. He reported that the University faces severe restraints so far as state budgetary support is concerned, and said that he is encouraging the academic departments to redouble their efforts to attract funds from the private sector as well as grants from federal sources.

As for instructional programs, he said: "In the months ahead we shall be forced to make some very difficult programmatic

H. Lawrence Hall

Dr. H. Lawrence Hall, Emeritus Professor of Management, died February 14. Dr. Hall served on the faculty of the School of Business and Economics from 1961 to 1980. The family requests that anyone who wishes to remember Dr. Hall may do so by making a donation to the American Cancer Society.

Hearst Castle Excursion Canceled; Other Social Events Being Planned

The proposed overnight bus excursion to Hearst Castle during April has been canceled. Don Mortensen, chairman of the Welfare and Hospitality Committee, reports that a random telephone survey indicated an insufficient number would be interested to warrant chartering a bus for the trip.

The committee is at work on planning several other social events, and will be communicating with the membership when plans are completed.

decisions. It is possible that we shall have to cancel some classes and eliminate some services that would normally be retained."

The President concluded his report by stating that "we must turn economic adversity into an opportunity. The state of the University is strained, but I think it's healthy. By and large, Cal State L.A. is healthy, vibrant, alive, and we're going to succeed."

The session of the Academic Senate was followed by a reception in the University Club, attended by more than 100 guests. During this event, the honored emeriti faculty were greeted by University President James Rosser and two of his predecessors in office, President Emeritus Howard S. McDonald and President Emeritus John A. Greenlee. The program was presided over by Walter S. Beaver, recently retired Professor of Theatre Arts, and welcomes were extended by Frieda Stahl, Academic Senate Chair, and Michael Grisafe, President of the Emeriti Association.

On Wednesday of Emeriti Week, a team of five retired faculty members, led by Donald Mortensen, Emeritus Dean of Fine and Applied Arts, offered sage advice to a gathering of active faculty who came to hear about the pitfalls of retirement. Serving on the team were Emeritus Dean of Engineering Leslie Cromwell, Emeritus Professor of Industrial Studies Clifford Dobson, Emeritus Professor of Education Jane Matson, and Emeritus Professor of Finance Edward Nelson and Emeritus Professor of Education Fred Rhodes. Also sitting with the panel were David Riles, University Director of Personnel Services, and Margaret Hartman, Acting Assistant to the Vice President for Academic Affairs.

The final event of Emeriti Week took place on Thursday afternoon at the University Club. A highly appreciative audience listened to a highly informative lecture by Emeritus Professor of Philosophy Sidney Albert on "Murray's Mother-in-Law: The Impact of a Shaw Play on Its Character Models." The lecture was presented as part of the University's Faculty Colloquium Series for 1982-83.

Throughout the week there was an exhibit in the John F. Kennedy Library of work by Emeritus Professor of Art Hudson Roysher and Emeritus Professor of English Richard Lillard.

wealth of good wishes and kindest appreciation I received from far and near, including all my house neighbors and a dinner party given for its oldsters by the community of Arlesheim. Inge (my stepdaughter) arranged a marvelous surprise party of 25 persons, including all of (Erna's) family, with literary, pantomimic, and musical contributions in which I also participated at the end! And my remaining sister of 78 called me from New York.

At the party I also said a few words about the blessings of my life showing that our greatest gifts cannot be claimed or earned by us, but are given us by a higher grace.

This year I didn't take a vacation, but I enjoyed the visit of several dear friends and also visited several friends in Germany and Switzerland. And I was stimulated by some good reading, fine concerts (outstanding among them the first half of a cycle of all Beethoven piano sonatas played by Alfred Brendel), a very impressive radio speech of George F. Kennan (given at his reception of the peace prize of the German bookdealers), and a radio lecture given by the philosopher Charles Popper at the occasion of his 80th birthday.

Fortunately, my professional work continues. I am teaching a little more than last year and have some interesting and rewarding pupils and I have played again a number of concerts as accompanist. I have also started writing again, this time on the subject of musical ear training.

In March, a young German musicologist sent me his doctoral thesis on listening experiments which proved some of my major theoretical findings of earlier publications. He said he sent me this book as a token of gratitude. I was very pleased because this also means that my ideas find an echo in the younger generation. From this initiative quite an interesting correspondence has developed.

In October (finally), also the first review of my latest book, "Die Tonsprache", appeared. It is just terrible, but so obviously written in resentment of my rejection of atonal music, and so biased and wrong in its major statements that I wrote a short but sharp reply for publication in the same musicological periodical because I don’t want to see the dissemination of my ideas hampered. Reversals belong to life as much as blessings, and this one I took with assured equanimity.

Hoping to hear from you all, I close by sending you my warmest wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Love, Gerhard

SIX DAYS TO LENINGRAD
By Ake Sandler

Last August Jane and I and some friends went on a 6-day cruise from Stockholm to Leningrad, a city Jane described as “the most grandiose prison in the world.”

It was a Soviet ship named for Antonina Nazhdevova, a famous opera singer at the turn of the century, and almost as old as she — by American standards. Actually it was only three years old and this was its second voyage. During its maiden voyage it ran aground in the Gulf of Finland and was laid up for repairs for three years.

So this was not exactly an auspicious beginning. But it turned out all right. The cabin was small but clean and comfortable. The food was simple but good. No caviar, sorry. And even more astounding, no chess. On a Russian boat yet!

This was actually a luxury ship by Soviet standards. After it had finished with us, it would sail for the Canaries and then the South Seas. It had the shape of "Love Boat" but hardly its accessories!

There were about 50 of us on board — all late summer season vacationers — including a group of women in their 40’s and early 50’s, all belonging to the hierarchy of Socialdemokratiska Kvinnoforbundet, that is the leadership of the Swedish Social Democratic party. They had left their husbands and children at home and were having one helluva time! And we men — married men at that — tried to help them enjoy themselves. As it turned out, they proved to be the real entertainment on board.

Leningrad is Paris by another name. The Neva river is like the Seine and the Hermitage like the Louvre, only better. I could write a book about this city (and may) and what it has gone through and how it has been resurrected. Its Summer Palace (Peter the Great’s favorite hang-out) is more impressive than Versailles. But why go on? Read my book!
