President’s Message

It is hard to believe that this is the final President’s Message of my first year as your president. In my first message, I thanked my predecessor for his service to the Association, and in this message I would like to conclude my year by thanking the members of the Association’s executive committee for their unceasing service.

Hard though it is to believe, Cal State LA celebrated its 70th anniversary this past year amidst continued great change: its 50th anniversary seems like just yesterday. Enrollment has reached almost 28,000 students, and in a recent Academic Senate meeting, President Covino announced that the University had received more than 60,000 applications for admission next year, from which it hopes to accept about 7,000 students. With its stellar record of enhancing upward mobility for its students, Cal State LA has become one of the system’s first-choice campuses. More than 50 new faculty were added this year as part of the University’s plan to increase its full-time teaching force.

At the same time, the turbulence of the world outside the campus has imposed new responsibilities on it. Cal State LA has responded to new needs by providing its students with innovative support systems: advisement about immigration law and procedures for our DACA students, a food pantry for our homeless students, and enhanced counseling services for students with mental health needs.

See PRESIDENT’S MESSAGE, Page 2

Inside This Issue:
Emeriti Biography Project: The Time is Now....................... 2
Professional and Personal .................................. 3
Lifelong Learning Now Under Emeriti Association Sponsorship .. 3
Dorothy Keane Establishes Roland Carpenter Fellowship........ 3
Our Winter-Summer In Argentina............... 4
Campus News ........................................ 7
In Memoriam ........................................... 8
Emeriti Association Nomination Committee Report................. 12

Visit the Emeriti Association webpage, http://www.calstatela.edu/emeriti

The Emeritimes
Publication of The Emeriti Association California State University, Los Angeles
Volume XXXIX, Number 3 Spring 2018

Panel to Speak on Student Well-being at April 27 Spring Emeriti Luncheon

At the spring luncheon and meeting on Friday, April 27, Cal State LA first lady Debbie Covino, director of counseling and psychological services Jonna Fries, and vice president for student life Nancy Wada-McKee will speak about the development and expansion of the Mind Matters initiative, faculty interest in using the “Mind Matters Minute” in their classes, the high demand for mental health first aid, and the restructuring of the Counseling and Psychological Services process to serve more students more immediately. “Student Success and Well-being” is the title of their presentation.

Debbie Covino, wife of President William A. Covino, is a master clinical hypnotist, integrative life coach, speaker, and blogger/author. She has spoken about the importance of self-care and inner well-being to diverse groups throughout Southern California, including staff, faculty, and students at Cal State LA. She has also taught courses in self-hypnosis for personal and professional success through the Cal State LA College of Professional and Global Education. She is the co-founder of the Cal State LA Mind Matters program, which focuses on the inner well-being of the campus community.

Jonna Fries, director of counseling and psychological services, has provided mental health first-aid training to more than 500 Cal State LA employees and suicide prevention training to more than 1,500 students. She has a doctoral concentration in diversity and her textbook, Eating Disorders in Special Popu-

See SPRING EMERITI LUNCHEON, Page 2

Faculty Approve Changes to Academic Senate Membership

By John Cleman

Following a process that lasted more than two years, tenured and tenure-track faculty have approved, and President William A. Covino has signed, an Academic Senate proposal to revise the Senate membership. After much debate on the Senate floor through this past academic year, the key changes are the additions of these voting members: seven lecturer faculty, one for each academic college; two staff members; one at-large student, either graduate or undergraduate; and a second Emeriti Association representative.

Proposals to include lecturers as voting members of the Senate had been made in the past, but in 2016-17, the Senate executive committee took up the matter in earnest. Several town-hall meetings were held in the colleges and committee-of-the-whole meetings were conducted in the Senate. In addition, membership data were gathered from other California State University campuses. Subsequently, a task force of executive committee members was assigned to develop a proposal for amending the Senate Constitution membership.

The proposal that the task force advanced included a number of minor clarification changes, but the main intent was to take “a step towards being more inclusive, thereby ensuring that the Cal State LA Academic Senate is representative of its campus community.” The number of tenured and tenure-track faculty, college deans, and ex-officio voting members, such as the statewide Senate members, did not change. At one point during its consideration, the provost was to be added as a voting member, but the Senate voted against that change.

The last Constitutional amendment of any kind was in 2001, so this marks a major change, not only in the Senate, but in the University culture.
President’s Message (Continued from Page 1)

This has also been an active year for your Emeriti Association. We continued to assist students with fellowships, making $16,000 worth of awards, which maintains intact our record of awarding more fellowships than any other emeriti association in the CSU. Our relationship with the Lifelong Learning program grew closer this year, with emeriti faculty delivering well-received talks at six senior centers, on topics ranging from Gilbert and Sullivan to ancient African archaeology. New speakers are always being sought; interested emeriti should contact Peter Brier, the Lifelong Learning liaison. You will also find in this issue of The Emeritimes an article on the Association’s biography project.

Please consider contributing to the project. A university is first and foremost its faculty, and with Cal State LA’s 75th anniversary rapidly approaching, this is your opportunity to write part of its long and varied history.

Finally, Association members will find enclosed with this issue of The Emeritimes a revised directory. Member contact information was inadvertently omitted from the directory sent out with the last issue. We have corrected that oversight in this directory and apologize for the inconvenience.

Stanley M. Burstein

Spring Emeriti Luncheon (Continued from Page 1)

litations, was recently published. Fries utilizes her expertise in treating eating disorders and trauma to serve Cal State LA students. In her spare time, she teaches, maintains a private practice, and plays with family, friends, and her who-rescued-who dogs.

Nancy Wada-McKee, vice president for student life, has over 30 years of experience in student affairs, including leadership positions at Columbia University, Purdue University, CSU Long Beach, and Scripps College. She has been a member of the faculty of the Leadership Development Program in Higher Education since 2008 and is a board member of the Asian Pacific Americans in Higher Education. On campus since 2008, Wada-McKee previously served as senior associate vice president for enrollment management and assistant vice president for student services. Her passion is mentoring young and mid-career Asian Pacific professionals in higher education.

The emeriti and their guests will gather in Golden Eagle Ballroom 1 at 11:30 a.m., with lunch served at noon. Following dessert, the panelists will deliver their presentation. The annual membership meeting will convene after the question-and-answer period, to end no later than 3:00 p.m.

Emeriti Biography Project: The Time is Now

This year marks Cal State LA’s 70th anniversary, a time in which the University celebrates its current areas of distinction, but more important its history of growth and accomplishment. Certainly, faculty have played a significant role in that history, but that role as played by individuals is all too easily lost if it is not recorded.

To that end, the Emeriti Association initiated a biography project, inviting retired faculty to submit an account of their academic, professional, and personal histories by filling out a questionnaire available on our website (http://www.calstatela.edu/emeriti/emeriti-biography-project). The task of completing the form is not onerous. Most of the information about academic preparation, areas of specialty, courses taught, publications, service, and awards can be easily imported from a vita, and, if preferred, the information can be submitted in other formats.

However, sometimes the most interesting and significant parts of a faculty member’s life are not to be found in vita items, so the

See EMERITI BIOGRAPHY PROJECT, Page 11
Stanley Burstein (History) delivered two papers: “Is A World History of Antiquity Possible?” on November 30, 2017 at the Jordan Center for Persian Studies and Culture, UCI Irvine; and “Hellenism in Africa: The Case of Kush” on February 15, 2018 at the Department of Classics, Florida State University.

Reminder: Dues Policy

The Emeriti Association’s fiscal year extends from July 1 to June 30. Dues paid between June 1 and June 30 are credited for the coming fiscal year starting July 1. Dues paid on or before May 31 are credited to the current fiscal year.

Professional and Personal

The Cal State LA Lifelong Learning program, formerly under the sponsorship of the College of Health and Human Services, is now under the sponsorship of the Emeriti Association. By affiliating directly with the Emeriti Association, Lifelong Learning will be more closely identified with the emeriti who constitute its principal teaching staff. Dozens of emeriti have been involved with the program during the past decade.

The Lifelong Learning Board, composed of emeriti and seniors affiliated with the retirement residences and community centers the program serves, has deposited its funds with the Association. As of February 2018, presenters will receive a $100 honorarium for each one-hour presentation at one of the venues. The venues have increased in number from four to seven and include sites throughout the Los Angeles basin.

Having expanded the program, we are in need of new participants. If you would like to discuss developments in your discipline, share stories about your travels or hobbies, or present your ideas on important cultural or social issues, contact Peter Brier, Lifelong Learning liaison, at 626-376-0300 or pbrier@yahoo.com.

Four New Emeriti Named

The following recently retired faculty have been awarded emeritus/a status:

EDWARD S. KLEIN

Communication Disorders, 1999-2015

RITA LEDESMA

Child and Family Studies, 1995-2017

LAURIE RAMEY

English, 2004-2017

YING XU

Library, 1992-2017

We congratulate them and hope to welcome them into the membership of the Emeriti Association.

The following recently retired faculty have been awarded emeritus/a status:

Edward S. Klein (Communication Disorders, 1999-2015)

Rita Ledesma (Child and Family Studies, 1995-2017)

Laurie Ramey (English, 2004-2017)

Ying Xu (Library, 1992-2017)

We congratulate them and hope to welcome them into the membership of the Emeriti Association.

Lifelong Learning Now Under Emeriti Association Sponsorship

The Emeriti Association’s fiscal year extends from July 1 to June 30. Dues paid between June 1 and June 30 are credited for the coming fiscal year starting July 1. Dues paid on or before May 31 are credited to the current fiscal year.

Dorothy Keane Establishes Roland Carpenter Fellowship

Dorothy Keane, emerita professor of education and longtime member of the Emeriti Association Executive Committee, has created an Emeriti Fellowship to honor the many contributions of her late husband, Roland L. Carpenter, emeritus professor of physics and astronomy. After working at Jet Propulsion Laboratory as a research scientist, Carpenter came to Cal State LA in 1964 to establish its astronomy program and was known for his outstanding teaching of astronomy and related courses. For many years, he mentored and supervised all the students, undergraduate and graduate, who were doing research in astronomy and astrophysics. He retired in 1994. The Roland Carpenter Emeriti Fellowship will be awarded to students with an interest in and potential for pursuing a successful career in astronomy or astrophysics.
Our Winter-Summer in Argentina

By Carl M. Selkin

I
never applied for a sabbatical during my 40-plus years on the faculty at Cal State LA, but when our son and daughter-in-law arranged to take sabbaticals last winter from the University of Washington, Tacoma, Carol and I volunteered to join them for a month of their four months in Argentina.

We would be more than happy to entertain the grandkids, Solomon (aged 8) and Miriam (aged 6), who could reciprocate by being our tour guides in Buenos Aires while their parents worked. Later, we would all travel together to explore Patagonia and Tierra del Fuego.

Buenos Aires

Our Airbnb apartment on the 13th floor of a modern building in Palermo Soho, a 15-minute walk from Peter and Bonnie’s apartment, was even better than advertised, with a pool and exercise room, and even a sauna (none of which we ever used). It was, however, an air-conditioned refuge in the energy-sucking heat and humidity of a Buenos Aires summer, and we gathered at our place to enjoy watching through floor-to-ceiling windows as the New Year’s Eve fireworks blossomed over the city.

Our panoramic vista faced the broad, muddy expanse of the Plata River and, with binoculars, we could spot Uruguay on the farther shore. I found myself quoting lines from T.S. Eliot’s “Sweeney Among the Nightingales,” the first reference to the River Plata I had ever encountered. The poem’s antisemitic and conspiratorial references, and its gloomy, threatening tone, at first seemed in stark contrast to the Buenos Aires we were experiencing, especially given that the furniture store down the street was named Le Chaim Furniture, proclaiming a Jewish identity in an almost gratuitous way.

Walking our neighborhood, both the poem and the furniture store colored my experience of this city known as the “Paris of South America,” although Buenos Aires, despite its odd dialect of Spanish, seems a lot more Italian than either French or Spanish. It has a web of wide boulevards, including Avenida 9 de Julio—at 13 lanes, the widest boulevard in the world—and architecture that I have heard described both as Second Empire and second-rate. The sidewalks and streets of our section of Buenos Aires were in disarray and hazardous for those of us who are unsteady on our feet. Our eyes were mostly attending to those obstacles when Peter pointed to plaques embedded in the sidewalks, a reminder of the dark conspiratorial tone of Eliot’s prescient poem.

Some of these Argentine markers were unadorned, others decorated with mosaics. They commemorated the “disappeared” of the Dirty War that is Argentina’s holocaust. The names and dates of birth and disappearance were reminders of the thousands of mostly students and other young people, leftists, suspected leftists, and resisters who had been tortured and murdered by the military dictatorship between about 1976 (or even, some say, 1969) and 1984. Many of the names were familiar. One name, Fingerhut, reminded me of my former colleague and friend, Gene Fingerhut. I stopped to take that in for a minute because it made personal for me a struggle that I knew little about, among people I had never known. Yet, like many Jews, I had relatives who had not been able to immigrate to the United States and who had been absorbed without forwarding addresses into the Jewish communities of Latin America, Argentina, and Cuba, in my case. I thought of placing stones on the markers, the custom when visiting graves in Jewish cemeteries; ironically, I did not want to increase the chances of others tripping over the memories we had stumbled upon.

Maybe Le Chaim Furniture, with its logo of champagne glasses toasting to the future, was a big Bronx cheer aimed at Argentina’s dark past. The vibrant Jewish community we observed in Buenos Aires had no visible signs of personal trauma. The rabbi we met celebrated the freedom of the community to hold services wherever they liked: a park, a beach, a public square. The preserved remnants of the bombings of the Israeli embassy and the Jewish community center, memories of the European Holocaust enshrined in the replica of Anne Frank’s house, among other sites, were facts on the maps and in the streets, but the Jews celebrating Shabbat at Amit Jai synagogue one Friday night seemed to face toward the future as well as the Sabbath queen, Lekhah Dodi.

There are, however, many visible indications of unreconciled tensions between past, present, and future. The Plaza de Mayo, the square at the historical heart of Buenos Aires and the site of the first station of the first subway in Latin America (1913), is a microcosm of these persistent strains. At the east end of the spacious plaza is the Casa Rosada, the Pink House, from the balcony of which Juan Perón and Evita addressed supporters. At the ambiguously named restaurant Perón Perón, photos decorate the walls showing these crowds overflowing the plaza and climbing trees and lampposts to express their love for her and admiration for Perón’s politics, which encompassed both the left and the right. Photos and newsreels of this adoration are also plentiful in the shrine-like Eva Perón Museum, which continues the myth of the beautiful, benevolent progressive who refused to take treatments for the cancer that killed her at age 33. Uncorrupted by old age and disease, she has become a venerated figure for many, while her husband, the president, tried to be both Bernie and Benito to the country.

Near the northwest corner of the plaza is the Catedral Metropolitana (the land grant for which goes back to 1580), the church that gave the world Pope Francis, whose politics seem to be as essentially liberal as his religious views. The church is a modest one by European or North American standards, and its baroque Spanish exterior has been largely replaced by a Greek revival front. The interior retains its 18th-century design, but it also contains references to the disappeared and the bombings of Jewish sites in Buenos Aires—crimes that were never prosecuted. These bombings have been attributed to Iranian terrorists under protection from prosecution by several Argentine governments.

The dirty war on leftists and their suspected allies is generally recognized as having been plotted and orchestrated by the Argentine government, perhaps from the Casa Rosada itself. Weekly gatherings in the plaza that began as protests by the mothers of the victims continue, since there has never been a full disclosure of the government’s actions and the fates of the victims. A more recent tragedy has also instigated an ongoing presence in the plaza: veterans of the Falklands War (the Malvinas War, according to Argentines) have set up an information tent in the plaza in order to voice their grievances against the government for inadequate support of veterans.

Iguazu Falls

Puerto Iguazú is a short, but stunning, flight to another world. An hour from Buenos Aires, the flight path roughly follows the Uruguay and Paraná rivers over a dense subtropical rainforest cut by multiple brown tributaries and lakes, and patchy cleared farmland, where the primary crop is yerba mate, the herb that is used in the moderately caffeinated brew that is the ubiquitous national drink.

Our hotel fronted on a wide lawn and was across a paved road from the bank of the Paraná River, South America’s second longest river (and part of the river system that includes Rio Iguazú), where a river boat once used as a restaurant restaurant rotted at a crumbling wooden pier. Groups of local people were sitting around on the lawn enjoying the heat-modulating breezes and the fact that it would still be light until about 10 p.m. We walked the quarter-mile into town, serenaded by bird calls and the cacophony of other wildlife hidden from view across the river. The town is very much a border town, at the intersection of Argentina, Brazil, and Paraguay. It is a settlement not so much dilapidated as undeveloped. All wealth, including good restaurants, seems to be in hotel properties.

As unremarkable as the town is, that is how spectacular Iguazú Falls is. We were picked up by our guide at the Hotel Panorama early in the morning when the temperature and humidity index already was somewhere between overwhelming and unbearable. We had arranged to visit this expanse of approximately 265 cataracts that extends for 1.7 miles along the Argentina side of the border, separating the upper from the lower Iguazú River. Crossing over to Brazil, where the panoramic view is said to be even more impressive, would have entailed visa and travel complexities we chose to avoid. I do not know at which vantage point Eleanor Roosevelt stood when she commented, “Poor Niagara,” in reaction to the overwhelming effect of this site. From any perspective, that response was warranted. Iguazú is three times wider (with nearly a half-mile back from the shore of the lower Iguazú River. Crossing over to Brazil, where the panoramic view is said to be even more impressive, would have entailed visa and travel complexities we chose to avoid. I do not know at which vantage point Eleanor Roosevelt stood when she commented, “Poor Niagara,” in reaction to the overwhelming effect of this site. From any perspective, that response was warranted. Iguazú is three times wider (with nearly 100 feet higher than Niagara Falls. It is a settlement not so much dilapidated as undeveloped. All wealth, including good restaurants, seems to be in hotel properties.

As unremarkable as the town is, that is how spectacular Iguazú Falls is. We were picked up by our guide at the Hotel Panorama early in the morning when the temperature and humidity index already was somewhere between overwhelming and unbearable. We had arranged to visit this expanse of approximately 265 cataracts that extends for 1.7 miles along the Argentina side of the border, separating the upper from the lower Iguazú River. Crossing over to Brazil, where the panoramic view is said to be even more impressive, would have entailed visa and travel complexities we chose to avoid. I do not know at which vantage point Eleanor Roosevelt stood when she commented, “Poor Niagara,” in reaction to the overwhelming effect of this site. From any perspective, that response was warranted. Iguazú is three times wider (with nearly 100 feet higher than Niagara Falls.

On this peninsula, sheep farmers share the land with environments for rare and protected species. At one point, the driver pulled over to the side of the road and pointed out an adult guanaco grazing in a clearing. I had never seen one before, and was excited to see it so close up. The guanaco is a large, wild relative of the camel, and can weigh up to 200 pounds! They are herbivores, eating leaves, branches, and grasses. We were also able to see some rheas, which are flightless birds related to the ostrich. They were grazing on the grass near the river.

Another highlight of the day was a visit to the Egidio Feruglio Paleontology Museum, which houses one of the largest collections of Patagonian dinosaur fossils in the world. We saw models of various species, including the giant, meat-eating theropod called Allosaurus, which stood over 20 feet tall and weighed over 5 tons. The museum also had a large display of invertebrates, such as trilobites and ammonites, which lived during the Mesozoic era. We ended the day by driving to the beach, where we saw a small group of sea lions basking in the sun. It was a beautiful day, and we were grateful to have had the opportunity to experience all of these sights.
guins separate and comprise their own “teen” subcolony at the shore, where they fend for themselves and transmit all penguin lore to the younger birds that have completed their second molt and sported feathers with enough oil to insulate them from the cold Atlantic.

The next day we returned to Ushuaia for our sea voyage on the Beagle Channel to the penguin colony on Martillo Island. The boat held about 80 passengers and the trip out was beautifully smooth, with magnificent views of the mountains and rocky islets with basking sea lions, cormorants, and other sea birds. We moored close enough to the penguin colony to view Magellanic, Gentoo, and Emperor penguins on the shore and swimming. But nothing prepared us for the rough return to Ushuaia.

Winds and currents in that area are unpredictable: Atlantic, Pacific, and Antarctic seas interact there, and the uncertain weather can raise sudden storms. I’m not sure why the seas turned so rough, but we were hitting waves that must have been five meters high, with a near gale-force, cold wind that created a roller coaster effect, lifting the boat on wave crests and smashing us down to our seats in the troughs. We got slammed a couple of times before we learned how to stand and absorb the force of the fall in our thighs. The crew was dealing with passengers in distress. not nauseated so much as panicked. Mira, on the other hand, was having a great time, laughing with each new wave and gleefully announcing upcoming large swells. She said she was laughing so hard her face hurt. My coccyx hurt, but not from laughing.

On our excursion to the national park the next day, our guide, a well-trained naturalist, picked us up after the two-hour train ride and took us by Land Rover. The snowcapped Chilean mountains rose into the clouds from the water’s edge across the strait. We stopped for our first hike on a gravel beach near the post office at the end of the world—the one and only post office where a narrow-gauge train that once ferried prisoners into the woods to cut timber provides tourists with a fascinating glimpse into shortsighted planning. After a century, the trees have not regenerated, and the stumps are a reminder of the inglorious history of the area—from the extermination of the indigenous Selk’nam people to the death from measles and pneumonia of the Yamani Indians who, we learned at the visitor center, went naked and slept outdoors without permanent shelter. Darwin’s scientific objectivity seems to have lapsed when he compared them to wild animals, but their adaptation to the environment and their social organization deserve at least a Google or two.

Our hotel was at the head of one of the trails to a mountain glacier. Climbing, we got our first taste of the spectacular scenery from the ocean to the mountains. A quarter-mile up the trail, we were surprised to find an alpine tea house that could have been in the Alps or the English Lake District. The trail was too steep for the old folks to make much progress, but our pace enabled us to observe the frolicking dogs and the beds of wild berries at the side of the trail.

Our Winter-Summer in Argentina (Continued from Page 5)

El Calafate

Our last adventure was on the western edge of Argentine Patagonia, about 350 miles by air north. El Calafate is the base for exploring the Perito Moreno glacier system that feeds Lago Argentino, the country’s largest freshwater lake. The tour of Los Glaciares National Park began in the town itself with a two-hour van ride along the lake and then into the Andes. As we drove, the demarcation between the arid Patagonian plain and the alpine region was as clear as the brown landscape on one side of the highway and the green landscape on the other side. The road ascended into the forest, and we made stops to view the glacier from a number of angles above it so we could get an idea of this massive ice flow that locks up the world’s third largest reserve of freshwater, according to Wikipedia. After lunch at a restaurant overlooking the glacier and a portion of the lake, we were taken down to the boat landing to continue waiting for calving of the Perito Moreno Glacier from the boat on Lago Argentino.
our exploration, sailing to within a couple of hundred feet of the three-mile-wide wall of ice that rises 240 feet above the surface of the lake. The boat cut its engines and all 60 or so passengers crammed outside on deck, silent, except for the occasional hushed “wow.” The ice was jagged, with ice caves at water level and vertical neon blue lines that shone through its white face. Every few seconds, the ice started with booms or cracks from stresses in this 19-mile-long solid, moving river. At one point, as we were watching, the glacier calved with a loud crash and we all broke into spontaneous applause. We were told that this was a normal phenomenon not attributable to global warming, so we felt less guilty about celebrating it. We probably should have gone to the Glaciarium, the glacier museum/interpretive center, before visiting Perito Moreno itself. Instead, we took the museum shuttle for the three-mile drive back from El Calafate. The excellent displays covered topics ranging from local history to global warming, with detailed information specific to this Andean glacier system. And, there was an ice bar! In the underground anteroom, we were fitted with parkas and mittens and admitted into the bar itself—an industrial-size freezer with ice-coated walls. At the bar made from a single large block of ice, we ordered drinks served in ice goblets. The adults drank gut-warming adult drinks and the kids had soft drinks. It did not take long before we realized that sandals were inappropriate for this artificial environment, and Mira discovered that she was better off abandoning her drink, putting the mittens over her feet, and sticking her hands inside the parka. The feeling of going to a party deep inside a glacier certainly moderated the chill.

The final scene of the final chapter was fraught with conflicting emotions. We spent a day at the extensive bird sanctuary outside of town in the wetlands and chaparral near the shore of Lago Argentino. Nesting hawks and other aggressive birds dive-bombed us, talons flared, when we got too close to their territory. We had a variety of wooden blinds to use as observation stations, a great way to watch unseen and unobtrusively. As we continued our hike, Solly noticed bushes of calafate berries, blueberry-like fruit that we were introduced to in Tierra del Fuego National Park. He discovered clusters of a type of beetle on these bushes but nowhere else and took as many photos of these insects as of the birds. These, we found out from the student naturalist in the ticket booth, are calafate beetles.

Back at the hotel and packed to part ways, the kids made political signs for family photographs. It was inauguration day, and our ersatz signs and pro-women posters got positive comments, especially from some trekkers returning from the Chilian Andes. Their Hilary shirts seemed to have been through as much as the candidate herself, worn and stained, if not haggard. We were not sure what we would find back home. I thought about Argentina surviving Perón and military juntas, overcoming murderous antisemitism, and initiating an absurd war back home. I thought about Argentina surviving the candidate herself, worn and stained, if not haggard. I thought about America Indian and Alaska Native families who confront unique circumstances that affect oral health. The four-year project, directed by principal investigator Rita Ledesma (Child and Family Studies) and partners at the University of Southern California and Children’s Hospital Los Angeles, is believed to be the largest grant in Cal State LA history.

20th Annual Distinguished Women Awards

On March 14, nine faculty, staff, and administrators were honored at Cal State LA’s 20th annual Distinguished Women Awards ceremony. This year’s honorees are: Laura P. Flenoury, Program Evaluation and Research Collaborative (PERC); Bobbie Galaz, College of Natural and Social Sciences; Ruzanna Karmiryan, Department of Sociology; Maria Laines, Educational Opportunity Program; Allison Mattheis, Division of Applied and Advanced Studies in Education; Birte Pfeifer-Cullinan, Department of History; Isis Stansberry, Office for Students with Disabilities; Maria Esperanza Ubago, College of Business and Economics; and Andrea Zetlin, Special Education and Counseling. Sponsored each year by the Cross-Cultural Centers and the University-Student Union, the event, which coincided with Women’s History Month, recognizes University women employees for achievements in their fields, as well as other accomplishments, including contributions to Cal State LA, commitment to students and women’s issues, community involvement, and professional recognition. During the past two decades, Cal State LA has honored more than 180 women.

U.S. News Ranks Cal State LA Among Best in the West

Cal State LA is one of the best regional universities, according to U.S. News & World Report in its Best Colleges 2018 guidebook. The publication ranks the University 158th among the top public universities in the West. Among both
In Memoriam

ROBERT D. KULLY
Professor of Speech Communication, 1956-1992

Robert D. Kully, emeritus professor of speech communication, died on February 18 at the age of 90 in Alhambra. Known for his passionate commitment to faculty participation in academic governance, he served as chair of both the Cal State LA and statewide academic senates and was the first faculty member to be appointed to the California State University Board of Trustees.

Bob was born in Hastings, Nebraska to Louis and Celia Kully on February 27, 1927. After graduating from Hastings High School, he joined the Army and served in World War II.

After the war, he attended Hastings College, graduating with a B.A. in 1950. He earned his M.A. at the University of Oregon in 1954 and his Ph.D. from the University of Illinois, Carbondale in 1956, and joined the Cal State LA faculty later that year.

In teaching argumentation, Bob championed the belief that “all students needed to know were the views of Aristotle,” according to colleague Kevin Baaske. Aside from his teaching duties, Bob chaired the Department of Speech and Drama for two years, was the associate dean for fiscal affairs in the School of Letters and Science from 1964 to 1969 under the deanship of Leonard Mathy, and later acting dean. He authored numerous articles for professional journals and presented more than 80 papers, lectures, and speeches during his 36 years on campus. He was an active member of the National Communication Association since the 1950s and served as president of the Western Speech Communication Association.

Committed to academic governance on both the local and state level, Bob was chair of the Cal State LA Academic Senate from 1973 to 1975 and the CSU Academic Senate, from 1979 to 1983. In 1983, he was appointed by then-governor Jerry Brown as the first faculty member to serve on the CSU Board of Trustees. He served in that role until 1987.

Among the awards Bob received during his career are the Cal State LA Outstanding Professor Award (1975), Distinguished Scholar Award of the National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi, and Distinguished Service Award of the Western Speech Communication Association.

After his retirement from Cal State LA in 1992, Bob continued to contribute statewide, becoming the second executive director of the Emeritus and Retired Faculty Association (CSU-ERFA) in 1995. He led the organization for 12 of its then 22 years, until 2007.

Former CSU-ERFA president David Elliott recalls that as executive director, Bob brought CSU-ERFA to its full maturity as an organization. His long and wide-ranging experience in academic governance, along with his exceptional training in deliberative processes, made it possible for him to provide for meetings where complex issues could be explored with full participation and genuine respect for the democratic values that inform and sustain our society. His extended involvement in CSU system affairs, at all levels, equipped him with a broad range of collegial associations that made it possible for him to attract strong leadership to the organization. And, probably of greatest importance, was his passionate commitment to faculty involvement in university decision-making. For him, there was no higher imperative in university governance than the full and meaningful participation of faculty in all academic and professional decisions.”

Bob is survived by his life partner of 20 years, Linda Costigan Lederman, as well as seven nieces and nephews and their families.

SUMIYE “SUMI” NERODERA LEONARD
Associate Professor of Family Studies and Consumer Sciences, 1970-1986

Sumiye “Sumi” Neroda Leonard, emerita associate professor of family studies and consumer sciences, died on March 26, 2017 in Austin, Texas at the age of 88.

Born on June 9, 1928 in Santa Fe Springs during the summer of 1963. A physical geographer, Clem’s teaching responsibilities included courses in geomorphology; California, the United States, and USSR; field methods; and map interpretation. His spe-and life in general. He is survived by his wife Karin and sons Christopher and Don.

JUDITH LYNNE PAPENHAUSEN
Director, School of Nursing, 2001–2004 and Professor of Nursing, 1972–2004

Judith Lynne Papenhausen, emerita professor of nursing and inaugural director of the School of Nursing, died on January 19, just four days after her 77th birthday. The cause of death was septic shock. She had suffered a debilitating stroke in 2012 and was living in an assisted living facility in Huntington Beach.

Judy was born on January 15, 1941 in Kansas City, Missouri, the daughter of Pauline Burnice and Robert Eugene Papenhausen. Her mother worked as a hairdresser and her father was a painter and paperhanger. Her parents divorced when Judy was a young girl and her mother remarried Theodore John Grindstaff.

After the family moved to California, Judy attended high school in Garden Grove and then Fullerton Community College, graduating with her associate degree in nursing in 1963. After one year as an operating room nurse at Whittier Hospital, she became the charge nurse in a medical surgical unit at Palm Harbor Hospital, followed by the head nurse on a coronary care unit at St. Joseph Hospital, and by 1971, she had begun her teaching career as an instructor in critical care nursing and a part-time instructor at Golden West College. She also taught coronary care nursing at Santa Ana College, Cypress College, and Fullerton College.

A double graduate of Cal State LA, Judy completed her bachelor of science in nursing (BSN) degree in 1971 and her master of science in nursing (MSN) degree one year later in 1972, both with high honors. Immediately after graduation, she was hired by the University as an assistant professor. She moved through the ranks quickly and became a full professor in 1982. She developed, taught, or modified 30 different courses and was known as a master teacher by her colleagues and students alike. In 1995, she completed her Ph.D. studies at the University of Texas, Austin.

Having served in many leadership roles in the Nursing Department, Judy became its chair in 1996. Under her leadership, the department became the School of Nursing in 2001, with Judy as its director, and many visionary income-producing programs were developed, including initial collaboration with community colleges to offer the BSN, a long-distance MSN program with Kaiser Permanente, on-site educational programs at local medical centers, and cohort programs designed to increase the numbers of BSN students.

Judy’s knowledge, work ethic, ideas, and writing and speaking ability became known throughout the California State University and state. She was elected president of the California Colleges of Nursing, testified in Sacramento regarding nursing issues, and helped develop the state nursing master plan. She was a member of several statewide nursing task forces and advisory boards. Judy co-founded the nursing journal, Clinical Nurse Specialist, authored many publications and chapters in nursing textbooks as well as gave local, state, and national presentations.

In 2004, Judy retired from Cal State LA and immediately went to CSU San Marcos to open its nursing school and simulation lab, becoming the inaugural director. She was instrumental in developing two additional schools of nursing, at CSU Channel Islands and CSU Monterey Bay.

Colleague Eleanor Ferguson-Marshallack remembers Judy as “a dynamic and visionary leader with tremendous energy who was committed to educating nursing leaders. Her dedication was inspiring to so many and was fully realized as the director of two schools of nursing. I had the distinct pleasure of serving as the associate chair of the department during her tenure as chair. Her sense of humor was a driving force that facilitated our collaborative efforts.”

Shortly after her final retirement in 2012, Judy suffered a debilitating stroke, but amazingly never lost her sense of humor and sharp wit.

She is survived by her life partner, Constance Suzanne Burgess; sister Cheryl; sister-in-law Vicki, brother-in-law Michael, and their spouses; and one niece and two nephews and their families. A celebration of Judy’s life was held at the Reef Restaurant in Long Beach on February 17.

VILMA RASKIN POTTER
Professor of English, 1961-1992

Vilma Raskin Potter, emerita professor of English, died on January 29, nearly four weeks after her 94th birthday. Hired to meet the burgeoning needs of California State College at Los Angeles, her legacy is enshrined in the thousands of students she guided as credential adviser and in her scholarly contributions to the study of African-American literature that continue to be cited, anthologized, and relied upon by current scholars.
In Memoriam (Continued from Page 9)

Vilma was recruited to the California State College at Los Angeles Division of Language Arts to coordinate freshman English when the fledgling institution added lower-division courses to the upper-division and M.A. programs established at its inception in 1947. She and her husband Bert had moved to Los Angeles from New York City in 1949 and settled in Pasadena in 1952. Bert was a lawyer establishing his career in Social Security disability law after military service in Europe during World War II, and Vilma, a graduate of Brooklyn College (A.B., 1943), which she entered when she was 15 years old, had continued with graduate studies at Duke University (M.A., 1945).

She found a home in the English Department (from 1961 until her retirement in 1992), where she thrived and helped establish it as a major academic engine of the burgeoning Los Angeles area. As the main credential adviser for students seeking careers as high school English teachers, Vilma guided and influenced generations of these professionals. She was respected for her thorough knowledge of the complexities of subject and credential advisement, and for being a careful and caring listener who required students to take responsibility for their success. As a faculty colleague, she established especially close relationships with Department staff, urging them to call her Vilma rather than Professor Potter.

From childhood, Vilma was committed to the egalitarian and humane principles of the Ethical Culture Society in which she was raised. Her deep sense of the dignity and value of every individual were hallmarks of her personal relationships, her teaching, and her scholarship. A pioneer at Cal State LA in introducing students and colleagues to African-American writers, especially the poets of the Harlem Renaissance, she made important contributions to the field, including “Reconsiderations and Reviews: A Remembrance for Robert Hayden, 1913-1980,” Melus. 8(1), 1981 and “Race and Poetry: Two Anthologies of the Twenties,” College Language Association, March 1986. Her Reference Guide to Afro-American Publications and Editors 1827-1946 was a landmark of scholarship in the field.

Poetry and music were close to her heart. In 1979, her study of Thomas Hardy’s metrics, “Poetry and the Fiddler’s Foot: Metres in Thomas Hardy’s Work,” The Musical Quarterly, Volume LXV, Issue 1, January 1979, was published. In addition, Vilma helped pave the way for the 1989 campus visit of poet Gwendolyn Brooks, who was not only internationally recognized as the first African-American to win a Pulitzer Prize (1950), but also as a champion of Cal State L.A. alumnus Michael S. Harper’s first book of poems.

After retirement, Vilma continued being published (“Percy MacCaye’s Caliban for a Democracy,” Journal of American Culture, Winter 1996). She was never really retired, as she continued practicing piano, studying French, and writing four collections of poetry. As a popular instructor in the Lifelong Learning Program offered by Cal State LA, she generously taught poetry appreciation and writing for more than a decade, offering classes at the South Pasadena Senior Center with such intriguing titles as “Imagined Gardens with Real Toads,” a workshop centered on writing inspired by family memories, and a series exploring poetry in the 1930s. Vilma and Bert were charter contributors to the National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge grant that established the American Communities Program at Cal State LA and endowed a scholarship designed to help students with financial need.

Colleagues and former staff recall Vilma’s stories of barge rides through France and weekends on their sailboat in Long Beach. Long-time department staff member Nancy Miranda recalls trying to learn to sail from master seaman Bert Potter, with Vilma standing by overseeing and kibbitzing. The lesson didn’t take, but memories of Vilma standing by and for students, colleagues, and friends are indelible.

Predeceased by Bert (2008) and son Paul (2016), Vilma is survived by children Alexandra and Joshua and their spouses, seven grandchildren and their spouses, and seven great-grandchildren.

ALVA FUMIHIKO YANO

Alva Yano, husband of emerita professor of physics Fleur Yano, died on March 13 in Berkeley at the age of 84. They had moved to Oakland in 2017.

Born on January 18, 1934 in El Centro, Al and his family were incarcerated at Poston Internment Camp in southwestern Arizona during World War II and eventually settled in Los Angeles. He graduated from Dorsey High School and Caltech. During his graduate studies at USC, he met Fleur, and they were married in 1959. Both Al and Fleur completed physics doctoral programs at the University of Rochester.

Al joined the physics department faculty at CSU Long Beach in 1964, where he enjoyed both teaching and research until his retirement in 1992. His work in theoretical nuclear and particle physics was supported by grants from the National Science Foundation and Stichting voor Fundamenteel Onderzoek der Materie.
He was visiting professor at the University of Groningen, the Netherlands, for 1969-70 and two following summers, and he was Senior Fulbright Lecturer at the University of Barcelona in 1973-74. He was also a guest professor at Uppsala University in Sweden in 1984-85.

Al was an avid reader of Jane Austen and Shakespeare. A strong believer in the necessity for women to be economically independent, he was also committed to and active in progressive politics. His other passions included classical music and tennis. He is survived by Fleur, his sister Grace, two grandsons, nine nieces, and three nephews, and their families.

Also Remembered:
VICTOR PAYSE, JR.
Professor of Electrical Engineering, 1959-1983

The Emeriti Association was recently notified of the death of Victor Payse, Jr., emeritus professor of electrical engineering, in February 2016.

Campus News (Continued from Page 7)

public and private universities with undergraduate and master’s programs, Cal State LA ranked 59th among western universities, moving up from 61st last year.

Two campus programs, both included in the magazine’s rankings for more than a decade, were noted as among the nation’s best undergraduate programs. The engineering program is one of the top 10 in the nation among public, master’s degree-awarding institutions, excluding military academies. The business program continues to be one of the top 10 in California among public institutions. In a separate listing, U.S. News recognized Cal State LA for its affordability. Recipients of bachelor’s degrees have the fifth lowest debt among graduates of schools in the West. The University is also listed as among the best colleges for veterans and one of the top 50 best value schools.

Cal State LA Rated Most Affordable College

Best Value Schools recently ranked Cal State LA as the most affordable college in the nation in its 100 Top Affordable Colleges ranking of public and private four-year colleges and universities. The organization stated that the University “unites its diverse campus and academic community with an unparalleled commitment to affordable scholarly inquiry.”

Two Graduate Programs Ranked Among Best

Cal State LA’s nursing master’s program is again ranked among the best in the nation, according to U.S. News and World Report’s 2019 edition of Best Graduate Schools. Cal State LA is one of only two public universities in Los Angeles County that were included. Since U.S. News began surveying nursing graduate schools in 2000, the University has been ranked among the top 10. The Patricia A. Chin School of Nursing has approximately 500 undergraduate nursing students, 175 graduate students, and 12 tenure-track faculty members. The graduate program offers a nursing education option and nurse practitioner options in adult gerontology and primary care, adult gerontology acute care, family, and family psychiatric mental health. Cal State LA launched its joint Doctor of Nursing Practice pilot program in fall 2012. The fifth class will graduate this year during the commencement ceremony for the Rongxiang Xu College of Health and Human Services.

The U.S. News 2019 edition also ranked the graduate program in social work among the top 100 in the country. Cal State LA’s graduate programs in education and public administration were also included in the publication. U.S. News evaluates graduate schools based on peer assessments from academic experts and statistical indicators that measure the quality of a school’s faculty, research, and students.

Cal State LA, Ballet Hispánico Collaborate

Cal State LA has partnered with Ballet Hispánico, the nation’s premier Latino dance organization, to launch a groundbreaking program, Community Arts Partnership LA. The University will host Ballet Hispánico as a company-in-residence serving Greater Los Angeles. The partnership, which will feature annual performances by the internationally acclaimed company as well as community classes, arts integration classes for public schools, interdisciplinary courses on campus, and workshops for students of all ages, will create a space where arts learning and cultural engagement open more avenues for students who are interested in the arts. In 2016, Ballet Hispánico performed at the Luckman Fine Arts Complex and participated in a series of residencies at Garfield High School in East Los Angeles. The success of these endeavors led to talks from which the partnership arose. Ballet Hispánico’s Community Arts Partnership program has been serving thousands for almost 50 years through innovative partnerships that bring the magic of culture and dance to myriad communities. Highly trained dancers, choreographers, and teaching artists are paired with students, educators, dance audiences, and the general public in the guided exploration of diverse educational activities.

High Schools, Cal State LA Commemorate East LA Walkouts

On March 2, 1,000 local high school students walked in to the Cal State LA campus as part of a commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the 1968 East LA Walkouts. The “Walk in to Higher Education” was part of two days of events exploring the educational legacy of the walkouts that included panels, speakers, and a historical photography and newspaper exhibit chronicling the monumental protest through the perspective of Chicano media. The East L.A. Walkouts (or Blowouts) began in March 1968 as students at five high schools on Los Angeles’ east side and their supporters protested against prejudice and inequity in the Los Angeles Unified School District. The walkouts were a seminal event that helped ignite the Chicano civil rights movement in Los Angeles. Many of the walkout leaders and participants, including Lincoln High School social studies teacher Sal Castro, were Cal State LA alumni or students. By the time the walkouts culminated, more than 20,000 students—including African Americans, Asian Americans, and whites—had walked out of classes across Los Angeles. Their actions ultimately led to educational reforms in the district.

Students from the high schools that took part in the walkouts—Belmont, Garfield, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and Wilson—as well as Mendez, Solís, and Torres high schools, heard from University, district, and elected officials and watched student mariachi and spoken word performances in the Luckman Theatre before heading into an afternoon of workshops exploring the legacy of the walkouts. Cal State LA President William A. Covino emphasized how the thousands who walked out in 1968 paved the way for today’s students to succeed in higher education at universities like Cal State LA, which is ranked number one in the nation for the upward mobility of its students.

The afternoon workshops followed an academic conference on March 1 that featured a keynote address by Cal State LA alumus and former student walkout leader Carlos Muñoz, Jr., professor emeritus from UC Berkeley. Among the many panels was one that focused on women in the movement. That evening, hundreds of guests attended the University Library opening of “Eastside Blowouts: Through the Eyes of Chicano Media,” an exhibition that displays articles and photos captured by a community of Chicano journalists documenting the moving and turbulent moments of the Mexican-American civil rights movement in Los Angeles. The exhibition will be on display through May 31.

Emeriti Biography Project (Continued from Page 2)

Emeriti Association is encouraging faculty to provide a broader picture of who they are, where they came from, and what they did before and during their years at Cal State LA. So, please take a little time to help keep alive the history of Cal State LA by recording your history as a member of its distinguished faculty. For questions, contact Dimitri Margaziotis at dmargaz@calstatela.edu.
EMERITI ASSOCIATION NOMINATION COMMITTEE REPORT

APRIL 2018 NOMINATIONS FOR OFFICERS AND EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Elections for Emeriti Association officers and Executive Committee members for the 2018-2019 year will be held at the emeriti annual meeting and spring luncheon, April 27, 2018. All Emeriti Association members in attendance at the meeting are eligible to vote. The offices to be filled, the nominees, and the term of office, as proposed by the Nomination Committee (Stanley Burstein, John Cleman, Dorothy Keane, and William Taylor) are:

Officers Placed in Nomination

The following officer slate will be presented to emeriti attending the spring luncheon. Additional nominations may be made at that time, followed by the elections.

- President .......................................................... Stanley M. Burstein (2018-2019)
- Immediate Past President ..................................... John Cleman (2018-2019)
- Vice President for Administration ............................... William A. Taylor (2018-2019)
- Secretary .......................................................... Kathryn Reilly (2018-2019)
- Academic Senate Representative ................................. John Cleman (2018-2019)
- Membership Secretary ............................................... Dorothy L. Keane (2018-2020)

Continuing Officers and Appointed Executive Committee Members

New appointments are shown in bold.

- Vice President for Programs ........................................ Deborah L. Schaeffer (2017-2019)
- Treasurer .......................................................... Marshall Cates (2017-2019)
- Corresponding Secretary ........................................ Barbara P. Sinclair
- Historian-Archivist .................................................. Vacant
- Chair, Fellowship Committee ..................................... Alfredo González
- Chair, Fundraising Committee .................................. Diane M. Klein
- Chair, Fiscal Affairs ............................................... Marshall Cates
- Database Coordinator ............................................... José L. Galván
- Lifelong Learning Program Coordinator ..................... Peter Brier
- Webmaster ............................................................ Demetrius J. Margaziotis
- The Emeritimes Editorial Board ................................. J. Theodore Anagnoson, John Cleman, Harold Goldwhite, Frieda A. Stahl (Chair), (Vacant)
- Life Executive Members .......................................... Janet C. Fisher-Hoult, Frieda A. Stahl