Innovative Approaches to Curriculum Development

The Charter College of Education (CCOE) has taken advantage of semester conversion to reconceptualize curricula and programs across the many disciplines and programs represented in the College. In the Division of Applied and Advanced Studies in Education, faculty in Instructional Technology have designed a Certificate Program in Online Teaching and Learning. CSULA will offer the only program of this kind in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. In the Division of Curriculum & Instruction, among other credential and MA program redesigns and enhancements, the secondary school credential faculty are considering ways to apply the model of the Los Angeles Urban Learning Teacher Residency program, a federally-funded project to the traditional single subject credential. Lastly, developing out of semester conversion conversations, Reading MA students, will participate in the C. Lamar Meyer Learning Center’s activities on Saturday mornings to gain experiences in teaching reading to participating Center students, and the Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) program plans to use the Center as a practicum site in which TESOL MA candidate will offer ESL classes to the parents of participating students.
