How to contact the Philosophy Department office and professors:

Telephones:

| Department Office       | 323-343-4180      |
| Fax                     | 323-343-4193      |

Faculty offices all have direct lines; numbers are listed on syllabi, on website, and are available from Philosophy staff.

E-mail:

| Department Office       | dbalder@cslnet.calstatela.edu |

If you have no advisor yet, use philba@calstatela.edu to ask questions.

Faculty email addresses: the first initial and last name or first six letters of last name, e.g., agarry@calstatela.edu or kveral@calstatela.edu

2. Introduction to the Philosophy Department and to this packet

Welcome to the Philosophy Department!
The faculty members of the department are pleased that you have chosen or are considering a major or minor in Philosophy. We, of course, find it to be a field filled with important and fascinating questions and issues. We look forward to discussing many of them with you.

You’ll find that philosophy classes are generally very small and provide many possibilities for interaction with faculty members. Try to take advantage of the opportunities both in and out of class to talk to faculty and to other students. Faculty members encourage you to come to our offices to discuss anything that interests you—you need not have a specific, class-related issue or advisement question in order to drop in. In addition, the department hosts two social events each year for students and faculty at the homes of faculty members. You’ll receive announcements of these parties. We hope that you’ll attend. (If you are not receiving regular emails from the department, give the department staff your current email address.) The department also has a reading room on the fourth floor of Engineering and Technology that is open at certain hours for students.

You need to have an advisor. All regular faculty members are student advisors; some of us specialize in undergraduate advising. Our names, office hours, phone and email addresses are posted each quarter. You may choose any advisor that you want. If you would prefer to be assigned to an advisor, consult the Director of Undergraduate Studies.

You need not make an appointment to see your advisor if you come during his or her office hours. Also remember that we all make appointments to see students who cannot come during our posted office hours. Do not be afraid to ask for an appointment at another time than those posted. You can also telephone or email your advisor with questions.

Student Organizations and Journal
There is a student Philosophy Club that plans visiting speakers and panels, sometimes shows films, plans excursions, and so forth. If you would like to become active in the club speak to other students, the club’s faculty advisor, or the department chair. There is also a philosophy student journal, Philosophy in Practice, which publishes work written by students. Any student can submit an essay to this journal which is edited each spring by the students in PHIL 400a-b.

There is also a prelaw society that spans several departments that some philosophy majors belong to. Your advisor can tell you how to get in touch with the prelaw society.

What does this packet do?
This guide for Philosophy majors and minors supplements the University General Catalog with informal advice and information. It does not contradict it. It covers some General Education information as well as major and minor information because there are some specific waivers that have been granted to Philosophy majors in GE. If you have questions, see an advisor soon (and often).

You should also get in the habit of reading the University General Catalog http://catalog.calstatela.edu and relevant websites for official information. The Cal State LA homepage is www.calstatela.edu. If you want to check courses from other California colleges for equivalencies to CSULA’s courses consult www.assist.org. Also helpful are CSULA’s advisement site www.calstatela.edu/univ/advise and the Philosophy Department site www.calstatela.edu/dept/phil. The department’s site contains updated course schedules as well as office hours and other helpful information.
3. What do Philosophy Majors DO?

When asked as children, “What do you want to be when you grow up?” most of us did not answer, “A philosopher.” Instead, students usually decide to major in philosophy after taking—and liking—one or more courses in it. The next question is often, “What will I do with a philosophy major?”

Students pursue many different careers after majoring in philosophy. Some of these careers require graduate study, for example, becoming a philosophy professor, lawyer, or minister. Others, such as elementary school teaching require a teaching credential. In still other areas such as publishing, the entertainment industry, non-profit foundations, governmental work, computer-related work, and so on, require job-specific training that is provided by employers. People who have studied philosophy as undergraduates are valued in a wide variety of careers for their developed analytical skills, their clear thinking and writing, and the broad base of their background and knowledge.

The philosophy major includes different options related to career goals. The General Option and Prelaw Option both require 62 units of philosophy courses. The pattern of courses varies. The Prelaw Option also includes 20 units from other disciplines that will help provide an especially well-rounded background for students intending to go to law school. Details are given in the sections below.

Philosophy no longer offers a multiple subject teacher preparation option. Students who wish to continue the study of philosophy with preparation for elementary or middle school teaching, should consider the Liberal Studies major. Some options in that major include philosophy courses.

4. Information on General Education and University Requirements Specifically for Philosophy Majors and Minors

Although many students have almost finished their GE courses before consulting a philosophy advisor, the comments below concern some of the newer requirements and specific information for philosophy majors. If you still have many GE courses to complete, your philosophy advisor can help you with your choices and with any questions you have—whether about lower-division GE or upper-division theme courses.

A few important points about GE for Philosophy majors and minors.

- The current GE program went into effect in 1998. What is stated below applies to this program (unless a different date is given). One important way that this program differs from the previous ones is that it requires 8 units of “diversity courses”; since these courses also count in other categories (e.g., as upper-division theme courses or in lower-division blocks C, D, or E), you need not take extra units to meet this requirement.

- Lower-division GE courses: You are permitted to satisfy a lower-division GE requirement by taking a course from your major department. For example, you may satisfy Blocks A3, C3, C5 or E by taking a PHIL course without restriction. Of course, you may also take courses from other departments in these blocks as well.

- GE Themes: Philosophy majors have a special waiver so that they are allowed to take a PHIL course in their GE Theme. Let’s be clear about this: you are allowed (without a petition) to take a PHIL course as part of your GE theme and count it for GE credit; you may not count it both as a course in your major program and as a GE course. There are no restrictions on what themes you choose. Let your interests be your guide.

Are there any special rules for minors?

- No. You are allowed to overlap your minor and GE courses any way you wish!

Are the “University Requirements” part of GE?

No, but you are still subject to them.

- Everyone must pass the Writing Proficiency Exam (WPE: UNIV 400). It is 0 units.
- Everyone entering (with a “Catalog Date”) after 1993 must take a second composition course, ENGL 102. Many of you have transfer credit for this course.
- Freshmen entering Fall 1998 and after must take an Introduction to Higher Education course. (If you came in as a Philosophy major, the course is AL 101; if you came in undeclared or in another major, the course will have a different prefix; all satisfy the same requirement.) If you transferred here Fall 1999 or after as a Philosophy major, you are required to take AL 301: Transition to CSULA for Transfer Students. If you took the transition course in another CSULA College, for example, Natural and Social Science, you’ve satisfied the requirement.

Other University Requirements and Rules…

The University General Catalog contains all official information; the Schedule of Classes contains relevant deadlines. This packet does not cover university-wide information that all students need to know, e.g.,

- That you need to apply for graduation two quarters before you expect to graduate.
- That you need to file a Leave of Absence form if you do not remain in “continuing student” status (if you do not, you will be subject to the requirements that are in place when you return!)

5. General Advice about Philosophy Courses for ALL Philosophy Majors and Minors

Upper-division philosophy courses (except for GE theme courses) are typically offered only once each year. So it is important to plan carefully to make sure to schedule the courses you want most.

In what order should you take philosophy courses?

Although everyone understands that students sometimes find it difficult to schedule courses in an ideal order, some recommendations are given below. A schedule of all upper-division PHIL courses for the entire academic year is available from your advisor, in the department office, or on the department’s website. You’ll find it very useful to consult this schedule far in advance if you must fit your classes into your work schedule or other responsibilities. In addition, the department’s two-year projected schedule is available on the department’s and college’s website. However, don’t rely heavily on the second projected year. There are always a number of changes that must be made.

- Take Phil 151: Phil Ideas: Knowledge and Reality, and Phil 250: Introduction to Symbolic Logic, immediately. If you are in the Prelaw Option, you are permitted to take Phil 160: Critical Thinking, instead of Phil 250. We nevertheless strongly recommend Phil 250. Note that minors may take either Phil 151: Phil Ideas: Knowledge and Reality, or Phil 152: Phil Ideas: Human Values, for their introductory course.

- Take the 300-level “core” courses before 400-level courses, especially those with related subject matter. More specifically,

  - Take Phil 300: Phil Research & Writing as soon as possible after completing your lower division philosophy courses.

  - Take Phil 311: Hist of Ancient Philosophy, before Phil 313: Hist of Modern Philosophy, Phil 450: Plato, Phil 451: Aristotle, and Phil 452: Medieval Philosophy;

  - Take Phil 313: Hist of Modern Philosophy, before Phil 458: Major Figures in Modern Philosophy, Phil 459: Recent Philosophy, and ideally before Phil 470: Theory of Knowledge, as well.

  - Take Phil 304: Ethics I, before Phil 420: Ethics II.

  - Take Phil 496: Senior Seminar, at the last available time before you graduate. It is a senior capstone course that is explained below under “Portfolios.” It is offered in Spring Quarter.

  - Of course, follow stated prerequisites and consult your advisor often!

_Can you count 300-level GE theme classes in your major or minor?_

You may count up to two of the 300-level GE theme classes on your major program as long as you meet the requirements in your option for 400-level courses. Specific information is given under each option. Also remember that a theme course counted for GE cannot also count in your major program.

There is no restriction on counting GE theme courses in minors.

_Protfolios_

As a way to encourage you to reflect upon your philosophy major, seniors choose several of their past philosophy papers for a “portfolio” in the senior capstone seminar, Phil 496. This is nothing to worry about. In fact, past students have greatly enjoyed reading and reflecting on their work. In your portfolio you might consider, for example, why you chose to study philosophy, whether your philosophical interests have changed, what your responses have been to instructors’ comments on your work, and so on. There is a handout with detailed information about portfolios available in the Philosophy Department office.

_It is very important to save all of your philosophy papers_ (whether written here or at a college from which you have transferred). _Save the copies, including drafts, with the instructors’ comments._ You will want the widest possible range of papers to choose from for your portfolio. Don’t assume, for example, that the papers you most dislike now will not be useful to you later. One of them might be exactly what you’ll want to reflect upon in your portfolio. Be sure to ask your professors for papers that you turn in to them at the very end of a course.
Philosophy minors are not required to take Phil 496 and do a portfolio, but may choose to if interested.

Are there internships or service learning opportunities in Philosophy?

Phil 395: Philosophy in Practice is a 1-3 unit course that gives students the opportunity to do internships or service learning. Speak with your advisor or with any other faculty member about this possibility. Students work through placements set up by EPIC and do reflective writing supervised by a philosophy faculty member. You can visit EPIC to see what kinds of opportunities there are (in the lower-level of the Career Center).

6. And now the details of the major options in Philosophy . . .

6a. Option I: General Option--Details

The General Option is the standard philosophy major. It allows for the maximum student choice of courses, both in the philosophy department and outside of the major.

Major:

Although there are only 62 units required, many philosophy majors take many more units than this number. They use their "elective" units noted above to add to their philosophy courses. We require only 62 units so that students may tailor their programs to their own individual interests and needs. For example, students hoping to attend medical school, graduate school in philosophy, or theological seminary may all have different needs in their undergraduate curriculum. Other students might hope to work in the business world or the entertainment industry; they’d have yet another range of interests and needs.

Required Core (26 units):

The core courses in the major should be taken as soon as possible (except Phil 496). These courses lay the foundation for the rest of your work in philosophy.

- Phil 151 Philosophical Ideas: Knowledge & Reality (4)
- Phil 250 Introduction to Symbolic Logic (4)
- Phil 300 Philosophical Research and Writing (4)
- Phil 304 Ethics I (4)
- Phil 311 History of Ancient Philosophy (4)
- Phil 313 History of Modern Philosophy (4)
- Phil 496 Senior Seminar (2)

Electives within the major (36 units):

In order that you have a well-rounded philosophy major, you are required to take courses from three topical groups. Within these groups there is no required course order other than the stated prerequisites.

Phil 452 Medieval Philosophy (4)       Phil 410 Social and Political Philosophy (4)
Phil 458 Major Figures in Modern Philosophy (4)       Phil 420 Ethics II (4)
Phil 459 Recent Philosophy (4)            Phil 475 Aesthetics (4)

Select at least two from the following, including at least one from 405, 460, 470:

Phil 404 Inductive Logic (4)               Phil 470 Theory of Knowledge (4)
Phil 405 Symbolic Logic (4)                Phil 480 Philosophy of Language (4)
Phil 406 Advanced Logic (4)                Phil 485 Philosophy of Science (4)
Phil 460 Metaphysics (4)

Additional Electives in the Major: (20 units, including at least 12 at the 400-level)

The rest of your major is your choice. You may take more of the courses in the three topical groups or you may take any of the other courses the department offers, including not more than 2 upper-division GE theme courses. Not more than eight units of directed study courses may be included.

Consult the catalog for a complete list of philosophy courses and the Philosophy Department’s annual upper-division course list for the precise schedule for the current year.

Coordinating your major with the rest of your undergraduate education:

Electives outside the major (40 units):

It is very important to keep in mind that you need a total of 180 units to graduate. The total number of units required for the General Option major and GE/University requirements courses equals only 140 units. The remaining 40 units are your choice--electives.

Don't confuse the two kinds of electives--those within the major (the 36 units) and the additional high number of units (40) "outside" your major. With the units outside the major you can take any courses you choose. You can take a minor in another subject. You can take more philosophy courses, which is a good idea if you plan to attend graduate school in philosophy. Or if, for example, you find yourself interested in aesthetics, you might want to take courses in music, art, theater, or film. If you are in a pre-med curriculum, you need to take sciences courses. If you are thinking of entering the business world, you might fill in some of your electives with relevant business courses, communication courses or psychology courses. You might want to improve your language skills in another language. Discuss various possibilities with your advisor.

General Education (72 units) and University Requirements (6 units):

Students need 12 upper-division theme units as well as 60 lower-division GE units. See Sec. 4 above for relevant comments on both GE and the University Requirements.

6b. Option II: Prelaw Option—Details
Law schools desire students who have developed their analytical skills, write cogently, and have a broad liberal arts background. Although the prelaw option may be chosen by any student, it is especially suited for students who want to attend law school. Both options in the philosophy major develop the analytical and critical thinking skills needed in the study and practice of law (as well as in good LSAT preparation). The prelaw option combines 20 units of relevant courses outside philosophy with a pattern of 62 units of philosophy designed to focus on important human institutions and values on which the law is based.

Major: Prelaw Option

Required Core (26 units):

- Phil 311  History of Ancient Philosophy (4)
- Phil 313  History of Modern Philosophy (4)
- Phil 496  Senior Seminar (2)

Philosophy Electives within the Major (36 units):

In order that you have a well-rounded philosophy major that emphasizes areas especially important for the study of law, you are required to take courses from two topical groups. Within these groups there is no required course order other than the stated prerequisites.

Select two from the following:

- Phil 410  Social and Political Philosophy (4)
- Phil 420  Ethics II (4)
- Phil 490  Philosophy of Law (4)

Select two from following:

- Phil 470  Theory of Knowledge (4)
- Phil 480  Philosophy of Language (4)
- Phil 485  Philosophy of Science (4)

Additional Electives in Philosophy (20 units, including 12 at the 400-level):

The rest of your philosophy courses are your choice. You may take more of the courses in the two topical groups or you may take any of the other courses the department offers, including not more than 2 upper-division GE theme courses. Not more than eight units of directed study courses may be included.

Consult the catalog for a complete list of philosophy courses and Philosophy Department’s annual upper-division course list for the precise schedule for the current year.

Prelaw Option Electives Outside Philosophy (20 units):
These 20 interdisciplinary units include courses beneficial as background for the study of law. Students often ask whether there is a list of special prelaw-option courses from which they must choose. There is not. Law schools do not require any particular courses. They want students who have taken rigorous liberal arts courses that sharpen their analytical and writing skills and help them to understand the values and institutions on which law rests.

Examples include Economics, History, Political Science, Sociology, and Communication Studies. Prelaw option students have a special “GE course replacement” approved that allows you to take ECON 201 or 202: Principles of Economics I or II (Microeconomics or Macroeconomics), for GE credit rather than ECON 150: Econ for Citizens. We recommend that you use this approved route (it does not require a petition.)

Examples of ways to choose your pre-law electives outside philosophy:

- Have you already developed interests in some particular fields of law, for example, family law or international law related to Asia? If so, you might use elective units to give you background. If you’re interested in China or Japan, study the languages, cultures, and history. If it’s family law, take relevant psychology or sociology courses related to human development, relationships, or families. (One caveat—law students sometimes change their minds about their specific legal interests.)
- Do you want to know more about law in its historical, social, economic or political contexts? If you haven’t taken all periods of American History, take both HIST 202A and B. Consider HIST 479 Constitutional History of the US, or HIST 476 Economic History of the US, ECON 471 American Economic History, SOC 488: Sociology of Law, SOC 449 Professionals in Society, or any of the series of Political Science courses, POLS 440 through POLS 447, which deal with constitutional law, judicial process and behavior, comparative legal systems, or legal research and writing.
- Do you want to work on your writing and reading skills in a nonphilosophical context? Consider taking upper-division courses in English.
- Whatever your interests, consult your advisor. These 20 units require your advisor’s approval.

Coordinating your major with the rest of your undergraduate education:

Electives outside the major (20 units)

It's confusing, but there are three kinds of electives for the prelaw option major--elective philosophy courses within the major (36 units), courses outside philosophy but within the major (20 units), and an additional 20 units "outside" your major. Within the last category of 20 units you may take any courses you choose. You can start a minor in another subject, study another language, take more philosophy courses, or choose more prelaw courses from outside philosophy. As mentioned above, if you have already developed a specific interest in law, e.g., family law, you might want to use these units to strengthen your knowledge base in psychology and sociology; if it's international law in the Pacific rim, study more Asian history, cultures, and languages. (Keep in mind, however, that many people change their specific interests in law after they learn more about them.) It is very important to remember that you need a total of 180 units to graduate. The total number of units required for your Prelaw Option major and GE/University Requirements equals only 160 units.

General Education (72 units) and University Requirements (6 units)

Prelaw option students need 12 upper-division theme units as well as 60 lower-division GE units. See Sec. 4. above for relevant comments on both GE and the University Requirements.

One last question: what do I do if I want to change options?

Your advisor can enter that change in GET.

7. Minors in Philosophy
There are two minors in philosophy—General and Prelaw—and a minor in Classics that is administered by the Philosophy faculty. Consult the Classics advisor concerning that minor. The Philosophy minors are explained below.

We hope that Philosophy minors participate in student and social events sponsored by the Philosophy Department. However, we can inform you of events only if you give the Department staff your address and email. Please do this.

7a. Minor in Philosophy—General

A 32-unit general minor in philosophy is available to all students in the university. It can be combined with any other major. For example, students who want to choose a "career oriented" major, but enjoy the study of philosophy, sometimes find that they can combine their needs and interests by minoring in philosophy. Others find a philosophy minor valuable for personal enrichment, for seeing “the big picture,” or for improving their critical thinking and writing skills.

Requirements for the Minor (32)

Lower Division Required Courses (8 units)

- Phil 151 Philosophical Ideas: Knowledge and Reality (4)
  or  Phil 152 Philosophical Ideas: Human Values (4)
- Phil 250 Introduction to Symbolic Logic (4)
  or  Phil 160 Critical Thinking (4)

Upper Division Required Courses (12 units)

- Phil 304 Ethics (4)
- Phil 311 History of Ancient Philosophy (4)
- Phil 313 History of Modern Philosophy (4)

Electives (12 units)

Select philosophy courses with your advisor’s approval.

7b. Minor in Philosophy—Prelaw

The minor in Philosophy—Prelaw is designed for students who want to attend law school and have chosen something other than philosophy as a major. It gives prelaw students background in the fundamental ideas and values of human civilization, especially Western civilization. It helps students sharpen critical and analytical skills needed for law school as well as for the LSAT. It can also be chosen by students who are not planning to attend law school, but who prefer the pattern of courses to that in the General Philosophy Minor.

Requirements for the Prelaw Minor (32 units)

Lower Division Required Courses (8 units)

- Phil 151 Philosophical Ideas: Knowledge and Reality (4)
  or  Phil 152 Philosophical Ideas: Human Values (4)
- Phil 250 Introduction to Symbolic Logic (4)
  [strongly recommended]  or  Phil 160 Critical Thinking (4)

Upper Division Required Courses (8 units)
Phil 304 Ethics (4)
Phil 311 History of Ancient Philosophy (4) or Phil 313 History of Modern Philosophy (4)

Electives (8 units)

Phil 410 Social and Political Philosophy (4)
Phil 420 Ethics II (4)
Phil 490 Philosophy of Law (4)

Additional Electives (8 units)

Select philosophy courses with your advisor’s approval.
