SUBJECT: Request for Reinstatement to Standing Committee Status and Revised Charge for the Academic Information Resources Subcommittee (AIRS)

The Academic Information Resources Subcommittee of the EPC formally requests that AIRS be reinstated to its original standing committee status within the Academic Senate. The rapidly expanding and deepening use of technology in higher education reinforces the reality that academic information resources have a scope well above and beyond educational policy. The change was endorsed by the Chair of AIRS parent committee EPC, the other standing committee chairs, and the Senate Executive Committee at an Exec meeting on March 24th, 2022, and by the previous EPC chair in 2018.

The return to standing committee status is an opportunity to re-engage with our current charge--one which, paradoxically, currently exceeds the scope of educational policy. For example, number 2 of the current charge reads that AIRS is: "To participate in the long-range and intermediate planning of the University as it affects academic information resource services." However, this charge exceeds the scope of EPC, and it has been a challenge to exercise the existing AIRS charge under the auspices of educational policy alone. The reach of technology in terms of service provision and administrative function ensures that not all issues raised through AIRS are related to EPC. Aspects of academic technology resources impact research and scholarship, intellectual property and copyright, RTP and other faculty policies, fiscal considerations, curriculum considerations, interactions with IT and other administrative groups.

Academic information resources impact strategic technology planning (IT), the setup and design of our classrooms (Fiscal Policy), the design of courses and programs (Curriculum), availability of consistent and compatible technologies for use by all members of the campus community (Baseline), research/scholarly/creative activities (Faculty Policy), and, yes, educational policy. Meanwhile, day-to-day technology needs and problems of our faculty and campus community impact workflow.

We see academic information resources as a holistic, ubiquitous component of our campus community, with the need to engage with our current technological needs as well as to anticipate those needs, through policies that are often outside the scope of Educational Policy (such as a campus-wide policy for online education, which would require coordination with Curriculum, Educational Policy, Faculty Policy, the Registrar, ITS, Fiscal Policy, among others), and to be considered equal participants in the development of policies that overlap with our charge from other committees and subcommittees (such as the Curricular AIRS Revised Charge

Review Process policy [Academic Senate 18-6]. We again urge the Educational Policy Committee and the Academic Senate to support us in this request as we continue moving toward an ever more complex, connected, and cross-divisional information environment on campus.

To reestablish Standing Committee Status, the Academic Information Resources Subcommittee (AIRS) proposes the following changes to the AIRS charge, membership, and overall structure, last updated substantively in the Faculty Handbook in Spring 2003:

- Lines 1, 5, 12, 19, 22, 33, 55, 61: We removed "sub" from subcommittee, as AIRS requests transitioning to a standing committee (see separate attached memos).
- Line 6: We replaced instructionally with academically – information resources impact our faculty beyond instruction, to include research, scholarly, and creative activities, etc.
- Line 6: This list of examples is meant to NOT be exhaustive, as technology and other information resources change frequently. We chose a shorter, more generic list that would remain inclusive for a longer period of time.
- Lines 7-8: We removed references to older models of technology, many of which are seldom in use anymore; see previous comment.
- Lines 8-9: We added references to learning management systems, as an example of a key technology used by most of our faculty (kept generic as the LMS changes), and added inclusion of activities beyond instructional activities.
- Line 9: We added the words "provision of" to be more specific as to the charge of AIRS, versus administrative elements related to technology support services.
- Lines 13-16: As we are requesting standing committee status, our primary charge was adapted to better represent an overarching responsibility to academic information resources, agnostic from the relationship with EPC.
- Lines 20-21: Our understanding is that the Baseline Committee no longer exists.
- Lines 23-24: We included our continued relationship with the Educational Policy Committee in our 3rd charge, which outlines our most common collaborations. We still intend to work with EPC on educational policy where there is an academic information resource consideration.
- Lines 24-25: We already collaborate with administrative committees, and foresee this increasing in the future, so we have explicitly included this in our charge.
- Lines 25-26: Since academic information resources are so wide-ranging on campus, we also felt it important to explicitly emphasize our need to collaborate with academic and administrative groups at varying levels, including direct collaboration with colleges, divisions, and departments when necessary.

- Line 28: We are specifically making policy recommendations, and updated the charge to reflect this.
- Line 28: As a standing committee, we would submit policy to the Academic Senate, rather than to EPC.
- Lines 29-30: We added an explicit charge about academic information resource accessibility, as required by ADA and other federal and state law. This policy work will take place in conjunction with necessary administrative logistics and any top-down mandates upon Cal State LA, and will remain focused within the AIR purview (e.g., online and hybrid course materials, what materials are required for all classes to be available in centralized digital repositories and in which formats, etc.).
- Line 32: While social media was in its infancy at the time the charge was last updated, the use of social media is now ubiquitous including for academic purposes.
- Lines 39-40: Changes our membership to include a member from the Academic Senate Executive Committee upon transitioning to standing committee status.
- Lines 51-52: We already have a representative from ITS who attends our meetings and provides us with status reports. Making this an official position will continue this access to valuable institutional information, and reinforces our collaboration with administrative groups that are critical to successful implementation of academic information resources.
- Line 54: The Director of Academic Technology currently attends our meetings and provides status reports. Making this an official position will continue the relationship with those on campus most connected to academic technology.
- Line 56: Accessibility is required by law and impacts all aspects of instructional technology. Adding a member to the committee who is an expert in accessible technology will help the committee consider accessibility issues early in planning and address current accessibility issues.
- Lines 65-67: We adopted more standardized language, similar to that provided by the EPC chair, to better reflect the ongoing nature of filling committee membership positions.
