The Pillars of Ubuntu

Ubuntu equally values the individuals who make up the collective as well as the collective. It is a belief, a philosophy and a sacred practice based on these principles:

- We are defined by our compassion and kindness towards others
- We hold ourselves and one another accountable in humanistic ways
- We are connected not only to our communities, but also to our Ancestors, who are always present with and through us

Indigenous Ways of Being: Collective Consciousness

Ubuntu (indigenous South African)

It's not about you It's not about me It's about We Working together as one

In La'Kech (Mayan)

You are my other me. If I do harm to you, I do harm to myself. If I love and respect you, I love and respect myself.

- Even the word Khoisan is a foreign term, coined in the 1920s by a German anthropologist trying to describe multiple tribes—including the Khoikoi and San—as a single ethno-linguistic group.
- Recent DNA research shows that, for tens of thousands of years, the so-called Khoisan were the largest human population on the planet. These days, those who identify as Khoisan are an ostracized minority, not just inside their country but also within the coloured community (in South Africa)
- In the third to sixth centuries, northern Bantu groups migrated into southern Africa from central Africa, establishing agricultural settlements and displacing many of the traditionally hunter-gatherer Khoisan.
 When the Europeans arrived—1,000 years later—the Khoisan were the first to fight against them,
 - leading to a series of of 17th century wars between the Khoikoi and Dutch settlers.
 - Their native resistance culminated in the 18th century in battles that came to be known as the Bushman Wars. Eventually, smallpox decimated the majority of the Khoisan population, making it easier for settlers to take their land and then force the natives to work on it.

In Class Activity: The Long Future of Indigenous South Africans

Individually read the article: Indigenous Peoples in South Africa and answer the following questions:

https://www.iwgia.org/en/south-africa.html

- What has South Africa voted in favor of, according to the article?
- What are indigenous San and Khoekhoe peoples excercising?
- What did the Law of Traditional Leadership and Khoisan Bill intend to do (it was voted down as deficient and invalid in 2023)?
- What percentage of the South African population is comprised of indigenous peoples?
