

Orlando J. Pérez is Professor of Political Science and served as Dean of the School of Liberal Arts and Sciences at the University of North Texas at Dallas (UNT-Dallas). As Dean, he led efforts to develop the first strategic plan for the School through a highly collaborative process involving faculty, staff, and students, highlighting six key values: diversity, innovation, engagement, leadership, community, and professional skills. Before joining UNT-Dallas, he served as Associate Dean of the College of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences at Millersville University of Pennsylvania (2014-2019); and Professor of Political Science, Director of the Cultural and Global Studies Program, and Chairperson in the Department of Political Science at Central Michigan University (1998-2014). His career as a faculty and administrator reflects 30 years of experience with strategic planning, shared governance, global studies, hiring and evaluating faculty, curriculum development, assessment and accreditation, advancing student success, and promoting diversity, equity and inclusion. He received an A.S. in pre-medicine from Miami-Dade Community College (1983), a B.S. in biochemistry from the University of Miami (1985), a B.A. in political science from Florida International University (1989) and a Masters (1992) and Ph.D. (1996) in political science from the University of Pittsburgh. As a consultant, he worked on public opinion surveys, democratization, civil-military relations, and anti-corruption issues for the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the United Nations Development Program (UNDP). He has taught and published extensively in the areas of comparative politics, Latin American politics, U.S.-Latin American relations, civil-military relations, public opinion and empirical democratic theory. He is the author of Political Culture in Panama: Democracy after Invasion (2011); Civil-Military Relations in Post-Conflict Societies: Transforming the Role of the Military in Central America (2015); Co-author of Making Police Reform Matter in Latin America (2023); and Co-editor of Latin American Democracy: Emerging Reality or Endangered Species (2015); and Democracy and Security in Latin America: State Capacity and Governance under Stress (2022).