Introduction

Welcome to the thirty-sixth edition of Perspectives: A Journal of Historical Inquiry, the CSULA History Department's peer-reviewed journal. Under the supervision of Dr. Birte Pflieger and in conjunction with Phi Alpha Theta's Eta Xi Chapter, this and past editions are written and edited entirely by undergraduate and graduate students in the History Department. Since its inaugural edition in 1973, Perspectives has provided the academic community with an accessible forum for historical inquiry. The following articles proudly continue that tradition.

First, Dustin Black deconstructs the meaning of slander in seventeenth-century New Amsterdam. Next, Elwing Suong Gonzalez examines the social and cultural changes of Alhambra from a white suburban enclave to an ethnically diverse urban center. In the third article, Rosa Cesaretti discusses the fascinating experience of archival research as she traces the life story of Eugenio Hernandez. Then, Ryan Johnson reflects on how the transcontinental railroad changed the meaning of masculinity in the American West. Abbie Perry explores how African American welfare mothers of the 1960s used stereotypes about them to assert control over their lives. Lastly, Kristina Werden focuses on the importance of masculinity in the presidential election of 1960.

Volume thirty-six is the product of History 497, an upper-division course in journal editing and publishing and the result of collaboration among a diverse, energetic and creative group of student editors. This edition features book reviews, advertisements and a new interactive online version. In addition, we premiere a scholarship opportunity page, listing scholarships from Phi Alpha Theta, the History Department, and the College of Natural and Social Sciences. This year the editors received a record number of submissions, making the selection and editing process particularly exciting and intellectually challenging. Coincidentally, unlike previous editions, all of the papers selected deal with issues in American history, from the colonial era to the present. This volume thus serves as a reminder of last year's historic presidential election and the imperative for historians to reflect on the past and present struggles of American identity and experience. The editors of volume thirty-six are confident in the scholarly relevance of this volume to the CSULA community and beyond. CONTRIBUTORS

Dustin Black holds a Bachelor of Arts in History from California State University, Long Beach, and will soon complete the Master of Arts in History at CSULA. His research interests include identity, the environment, and human rights, with an emphasis on both modern Europe and colonial North America. He has worked in various capacities in the CSULA History Department, and is enormously grateful for the support of his colleagues. Dustin looks forward to continuing his research while pursuing a career in postsecondary education.

Rosa Cesaretti was born in Mexico City and grew up in Los Angeles. She is married to an Italian artist, and together they have a son who is comfortable in all three cultures. Rosa has been captivated by evidence of yesterday's events ever since that summer day in 1965, when she found an image of Jumbo the circus elephant who was killed in a train crash in 1885. She did not know the full story behind the famous pachyderm's death, yet she felt as connected to the moment depicted in the photograph of Jumbo succumbing to his injuries, surrounded by a group of men wearing long coats and hats, as if she had witnessed the tragedy herself. Rosa is currently finishing her B.A. in History at CSULA, intending to pursue a Master's degree in Library Science, with a focus on archives. Since finishing her Getty Internship at the Braun Research Library, Rosa has been interning at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory's library. She wishes to thank the Braun librarians, Kim Walters and Liza Posas, for supporting her research on Eugenio Hernandez, and for the opportunity to discover the four-leaf clover pressed between the pages of a 1774 almanac. Rosa also extends thanks to her husband and son for supporting her mid-life decision to go to college.

Elwing Suong Gonzalez is a graduate student in the history department at CSULA where she also received her teaching credential in 2004. She earned her B.A. in Ethnic Studies at UC Berkeley in 2001. She is currently completing her master's thesis on demographic changes in Alhambra from the 1940s to the present. She is also an eighth-grade history teacher as well as a co-founder and director of the non-profit organization East L.A. Community Arts & Mural Program. She was born in Los Angeles, raised in Koreatown and throughout the San Gabriel Valley. She lives in Alhambra with her husband and two young children. She is expecting her third child this summer.

Ryan Johnson is currently a second year Master's student in History at CSULA with an emphasis in American labor history and class-relations in the Gilded Age and Progressive Era. This will be his second publication in the Department's Perspectives, with another article in Volume 32. He plans to move on to a doctoral program in the fall and is considering the University of Minnesota and the University of Toronto. Johnson received his B.A. in History from CSULA in 2006.

Abbie Perry is a Master's Candidate at CSULA studying U.S. and Latin American history. She is interested in the social and economic consequences of slavery in the African-American community. Her future plans include teaching, researching, and writing in the fields of sociology and history, especially continuing her studies of the African-American community. Abbie's career and educational goals have been most inspired by her grandmother Mildred Perry who was a community activist and educator in Los Angeles from the 1960s to the 1980s. Abbie was raised in San Bernardino and received her B.A. in History/Law and Society from UC Riverside in 2005.

Kristina A. Werden is currently completing a B.A. in History and Philosophy in the College of Arts and Letters, and the College of Natural and Social Sciences at CSULA. In 2005 she completed a semester abroad in Prague and since then she has developed a keen interest in modern central and eastern European intellectual history. Other research interests are modern American political culture, and its role in the Cold War. She is a member of Phi Alpha Theta.
